

UNDERSTAND WHAT A GLOBAL MINDSET IS AND WHY IT'S IMPORTANT, AND COMMIT TO HELPING OUR KIDS DEVELOP IT.

It's all about the mindset. While there are many steps parents can take to raise global children, encouraging a global mindset by inspiring children to explore the world intellectually, emotionally and physically makes for a strong foundation on which to build.

To do so, we must inspire our children to be curious about the world and to become globally aware.

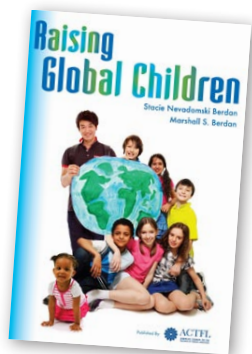

We must teach our children to communicate and interact with people across different cultures and in other countries so that they can begin to understand different points of view.

We must do everything we can to help them begin to learn a second language as early as possible followed by the best opportunity to achieve language proficiency and cultural competency.

Having a global mindset reflects a way of life and a means for incorporating the world into our lives individually and collectively within our various communities. A global mindset is not only for children but parents, too.
